EDWARD SCHWARTZ, of Phenix is the new commander of the Arizona G. A. R.

BRIBERY in the California senatorial fight is to be investigated.

THE constitutional convention bill is the same one which was passed two years ago.

FELTON did not get the California senatorship until Stanford came on the ground.

It took $21,000 to buy DeYoung's votes for Felton. How much Estee's men were paid for supporting Felton will never be known.

THE bills passed by the 16th legislature will not be printed for 60 days and there is no use in trying to figure out what the provisions of a bill are until it gets in cold type.

THE unsatisfactory dispatches from Phenix will do for the time being. The Prospector wired for further particulars regarding the license bill but had not received any answer up to the hour of going to press. It is however pretty certain that the court district bill was left to sleep in committee. Cochise comes out of the fight with a company of rangers, $1,200 in cash and a whole skin; about the way it looks from a distance.

THE allowing of $3000 to the Catholic St. Joseph society of Tucson by the legislature, may not meet with the sanction of bigots, but it is one of the most benevolent and charitable institutions in the Territory and asks no questions of its patrons regarding their belief. A Protestant or Episcopal Methodist, institution of the same kind would have received the same consideration from the progressive 16th

A Sad Waste of Energy.

Could old Garrett have lived and continued in the path he had laid out for himself, the Vanderbilts, Goulds and Astors would have fallen far behind him in wealth, influence and position. But his time came in due course, and in the hope of perpetuating the family name, he left his son Robert to carry out the schemes he himself had originated. Up to that time "Bob" Garrett had been a roisterer, a Bohemian, a night howler, a good fellow. He had never been a business man, and when he tackled the vast enterprise over which his father had presided he did not altogether let go of his former career. He had not the application born of life long industry. It worried, annoyed and flustered him to be fastened to his desk four or five hours a day, and to be in consultation on matters of great and serious import the remainder of his time.

He sought exhilaration in champagne when exhausted with the mental strain of a day's labor. That unfitted him for the beginning of another day of hard work, and it began to be noticeable that Garrett was growing eccentric. He bought hundreds of suits of clothes, spent barrels of money on great banquets, and tried to make himself and the world believe that he was enjoying life in an easy and nonchalant manner. Instead of husbanding his energies, he dissipated them, and when he came in contact with the ablest minds in the world, and set his abilities up against the acutest and most cunning of his race, he speedily found himself entangled in the meshes of a net that meant his ruin. Threatened destruction of the vast fabric created by his father was about the last straw, and "Bob" Garrett's mind began unmistakably to totter on its throne.—New York Cor. Pioneer Press.

The Phonograph Can't Beat Girls.

An electrical man says: "Don't you fear that the phonograph is going to supersede the lady stenographer. Why? Did the bicycle drive out the horse? The bicycle can carry you wherever you want to go, but the horse is still with us. The ladies, I tell you, have come to stay. I have two stenographers, and they are not the very prettiest ones, either. Now, I had a phonograph in my office for weeks, but I don't discharge the ladies. No, and I don't mean to, either. It is just here: They can do what the best trained phonograph never can do. There is a large part of my correspondence I can hand over to one of them and never give a second look at it, because she can answer the letters as well as I can. No matter how near and dear your phonograph is to you, it can never do that. Moreover, I can say: 'I am going out of the office for awhile; I wish you'd look after things.' Now, the best trained phonograph, if I put a collar and tie on it, couldn't do that. No, don't make any mistakes. No machinery ever has succeeded or ever will in distancing the human race."—New York Sun.

WILD TIGER LILY.

Isolate in her conscious grandeur, creature of a royal blood, the one unrivaled Cleopatra of the wood. Something in her regal stature, in her fierce and fervid nature, brings to mind a vivid vision of the Lady of the Nile. How the splendor of her presence, how her sudden flashing smile! Glorifies the stammering spaces of the dusky forest aisle! And a face of Orient oval, olive browed and midnight eyed, Looks from flowing, flame hued draperies in its dark, imperial pride; While a figure fancy fashions, faultless in its mold and mien, Supple, sinuous, seductive as some tawny jungle queen. Then, as though a gathering tempest smote athwart Eolian wires, All at once with pride and passion, and as death, a voice inquired: "Do you wonder at my Roman? Do you marvel how I died?" —Julia Boynton in Lines and Interlines.

A LOVE SONG.

Sweet in her green dell the flower of beauty Lulled by the faint breezes sighing through her hair; Sleeps she, and hears not the melancholy nummers here. Breathed to my sad lute amid the lonely air. Towns from the high cliffs the violet is teeming. To wind around the yellow tanks that lure him from above; Oh, that in tears from my rocky prison streaming I too, could glide to the bowers of my love! Ah, when the woodbine with sleepy arms have wound her, Ope she her eyelids at the dream of my lay, Atoning, like the dove, while the fountains echo round her, To her lost mate's call in the forest far away! Come, then, my bird! for the peace thou ever bearest, Still heaven's messenger of comfort to me! Come! this fond bosom, my faithfullest, my fairest, Bleeds with its death wound—but deeper and for thee! —George Darley.

Views of an English Teacher.

Edward Thring's work at Uppingham has centered around two or three clear and sharply defined ideas—some principles of educational conduct which may be looked upon as fundamental and universal. The first of these and that from which everything else springs, is simple enough. It is that every boy, stupid and clever alike should have a fair chance, and should be really trained. Mr. Thring claims that no school, however great its prestige, numbers, wealth or its list of prize winners, can be called a good school, or even an honest school, unless it makes this a first condition of its work. The importance of the principle cannot be overestimated. Fully accepted and acted upon, it would revolutionize most of the schools of England, and probably most of those in America.

No true judgment of a school's real merits can be formed from its prize winning record. Given a school which draws some hundreds of boys from classes of society where the earlier training is fairly good, let it have wealth enough to attract a number of exceptionally able teachers, turn the teaching power of these upon even a small proportion of the cleverest pupils, and you may have a school with an overwhelming list of university and other scholastic distinction, while the mass of the boys are almost entirely neglected. That this picture does not unfairly represent the work of some famous schools is a known fact.—George R. Parkin in The Century.
